

Sea Fans

I am interested by the similarities in different parts of nature: the way trees branch being almost mirrored by their root systems and in this case how sea fans look like trees. Much of my deep imagination lies under the sea and when I started on the Treehandle project I remembered these corals that get washed up on beaches. Each individual fan is matched to a particular handle (ultimately, I have to thank Marcel Duchamp) which is a most enjoyable pursuit – to find the right combination so that they talk to each other and sit happily together.

More Sea Fans

There is one fake:

SEA FANS III & II

Sea Fan III, Tabellamare Argentum falsum, is made from silver and looks remarkably like the real thing. So the process has become circular because most of the other Tree handles are made from silver.
